May 1962 is "Operations Research Month"—in fact, if not by official proclamation. In Washington, D.C., the 10th anniversary meeting of the Operations Research Society of America (ORSA) on May 9-11 and the OEG 20th Anniversary Conference on Operations Research on May 14-16 will take place. The latter event is of special import to the Operations Evaluation Group because, as the oldest continuing military operations research organization in the nation, the group began its own career 20 years ago—May 1942.

The 20th Conference will be of international scope. The three-day session will explore the first 20 years of operations research in the United States, survey the state of the science here and abroad and discuss the future of OR in terms of the lessons of yesterday and today.

The conference will cover a wide spectrum of topics on operations research—from applications in public health to high-speed computers... from new tools for industrial use to fiscal planning for the Department of Defense.

OEG acts as civilian scientific advisor to the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant, U.S. Marine Corps. OEG's analysts function in problem areas which include strategic planning, amphibious operations, air warfare, submarine and antisubmarine warfare, and logistics.

This is complex and essential work. It requires scientists, preferably with advanced degrees who can combine analytical talent with a certain amount of enterprise. If you are a mathematician, physicist, engineer or economist who wants to participate in a significant research program, please send your resume to the Director, Dr. Jacinto Steinhardt.
