COVER

Developing tylosis in the wood of Eucalyptus obliqua. In general, a tylosis is formed by growth of a portion of a cell wall either into the lumen of a neighboring tracheye element or into an intercellular space, such as the duct of a resin canal. Such cellular outgrowths tend to fill the adjacent space, thus obstructing the movement of solutions (preservatives, pulping liquor) through the wood (Scale: about 1 cm = 1 micron).
