COVER
Spheres-within-sphere structure of a fly ash agglomerate collected from the electrostatic precipitator of an operating coal-fired electric plant. The formation of these aluminosilicate plerospheres (hollow spheres packed with smaller spheres) probably results from rapid differential heating of a non-combustible coal fraction and subsequent evolution of gas from thermal decomposition and dehydration (about \( x \times 2660 \)). See page 553. [G. L. Fisher, D. P. Y. Chang, and M. Brummer, University of California, Davis]
