Members of the Auburndale Girls' Science Club with a robot they built for a robotics competition at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The suburban Boston club was started by the mother of one of the girls, who was afraid her daughter would lose interest in science as many girls do beginning around the eighth grade. Many of the programs that are successful in reversing this trend rely on an all-girl environment, a finding discussed in this year's special section on women in science beginning on page 383. Is There a 'Female Style' in Science? The Male Box: Male Researchers Respond Feminists Find Gender Everywhere in Science Women Struggle to Crack the Code of Corporate Culture Work and Family: Still a Two-Way Stretch Entrepreneurs Say: 'It's Better to Be the Boss' The Pipeline Is Leaking Women All the Way Along Making Room for Women in the Culture of Science Called 'Trimates,' Three Bold Women Shaped Their Field Seeing Nature Through the Lens of Gender

The American Association for the Advancement of Science was founded in 1848 and incorporated in 1874. Its objectives are to further the work of scientists, to facilitate cooperation among them, to foster scientific freedom and responsibility, to improve the effectiveness of science in the promotion of human welfare, to advance education in science, and to increase public understanding and appreciation of the importance and promise of the methods of science in human progress.
