plurisectorial and international collaborative efforts; promote the responsible use of science in public policy; strengthen support for the advancement science, engineering, and innovation throughout the world for the benefit of all; defend the integrity of science and its use; strengthen support for the comprehension and appreciation of science; and advocate for higher education in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

The School of Science is an international, interdisciplinary, and interprofessional institution with a strong commitment to excellence in teaching, research, and service. The School of Science offers a wide range of undergraduate, graduate, and professional degree programs, as well as research opportunities for students and faculty. The School is home to several research centers, including the Center for Climate and Environmental Solutions, the Center for Energy and Environmental Systems, and the Center for Biotechnology and Public Affairs. The School also has strong partnerships with industry, government, and international organizations, and is committed to addressing global challenges through innovation and collaboration.