As one of the nation's premier Medical Schools, TUSM is dedicated to advancing biomedical knowledge and prides itself as a collegial and collaborative center of educational and research excellence.

The Department of Immunology supported by major investments from the Medical School has recently recruited a new Chair committed to building an internationally recognized department focused on the study of inflammation and immune mediated disease processes. The Department is home to cutting-edge core facilities including a Flow Cytometry Core, Next-Gen DNA sequencing Core, and DNA and peptide synthesis Core. The department is also home to the Sackler School of Biomedical Sciences T32 supported Immunology Graduate Training Program.

Successful candidates will have an outstanding international research record documented by high-impact publications and successful competition for extramural research funding. Candidates with expertise in all areas related to immunology will be considered, although those with expertise in neuroinflammation, cancer immunology, or microbiome research will be given preference.

Candidates should possess a Ph.D. or M.D. in a relevant field of study, and must have relevant postdoctoral or faculty experience. To apply, please submit electronic applications including curriculum vitae, and a statement of research interests.
