CONTENTS
The Deplorable Contrast between Intrana- tional and International Ethics and the Mission of Medical Science and Medical Men: DR. S. J. MELTZER
Cyrus Fogg Brackett: Professor W. F. Magie
Geographical Meeting in New York
The Pacific Association of Scientific Societies
Scientific Notes and News
University and Educational News
Discussion and Correspondence:
Scientific Books:
The Nature and Origin of Fires: Professor Douglas W. Johnson
Special Articles:
The Importance of a Consideration of the Fiber Proteins in the Process of Bleaching Cotton: B. S. Levine
The American Phytopathological Society: Dr. C. L. Shear
The Philadelphia Meeting of the American Psychological Association: Dr. Robert M. Ogden
The Illinois Academy of Science: Professor E. N. Transeau
Societies and Academies:

THE DEPLOMBLE CONTRAST BETWEEN INTRANATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL ETHICS AND THE MISSION OF MEDICAL SCIENCE AND MEDICAL MEN

The chief aim of my remarks is to point out the unique position which medical sciences and medical men occupy in the horrors of war which is going on between civilized nations. International morality may possibly derive some permanent benefit from a conscious knowledge of this position. However, in order to make my point clear, I shall introduce it by a discussion of some aspects of ethics.

Moral philosophy assumes for granted that ethical relations of civilized men are safely established; it concerns itself merely with the question regarding the nature of the origin of ethical precepts. In general, it may be admitted that the vast majority of civilized men indeed do not question the correctness of ethical demands. But writers on moral philosophy fail to distinguish between intranational and international ethics. Hence, we find frequently that international occurrences are discussed from the point of view of intranational principles; international occurrences are brought before the forum of a supreme court of the world for judgment, but the merits and demerits of the cases are argued from the point of view of ethics which obtain in intranational moral relations. But the truth is that there is an abyss between the two domains of morality.

Let us first look at the status of intranational morality. The ethical relations

1 Address delivered at the annual dinner of Columbia University Biochemical Association, March 26, 1915.
Science 41 (1058), 515-552.