HISTORY IN THE ARCHIVES OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY

By Sir WILLIAM BRAGG

DIRECTOR OF THE ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN; PRESIDENT OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY, LONDON

The archives of the Royal Society are rich in materials that illustrate various aspects of the history of the last three centuries. They have, of course, a special character, since they refer almost entirely to the matters in which the society has concerned itself, grouped under the general title of "The Improvement of Natural Knowledge." But these matters have increased in importance with the passing years and are now a subject of the first concern of the whole world. The effect of science upon social relations and social conditions has become very great, and the gains are obvious. Yet science does not appear to be in all cases beneficent. It has become a matter of anxious consideration whether or no the increase in the knowledge of nature must necessarily bring evil as well as good. Is there a fault to be remedied, and if so where does the fault lie? These questions have roused a debate which is even now in progress, and some hard thinking is being given to them.

It is of some help, I think, to consider the steps by which the present position has been reached, and the Royal Society archives may be used to provide the necessary illustrations. For that reason I hope that you will find it of some interest if, with that object in view, I refer to some of the papers and letters which they contain.

A few "virtuosi," to use the contemporary phrase, who met for discussion and experiment in the middle years of the seventeenth century were weary of the miseries of the civil war, and were glad to turn their thoughts to the consideration of natural phenomena over which the passions of men had no influence. Experimental science had long tempted thoughtful minds, and now the first founders of the Royal Society threw...
