Digitalis and Some of Its Derivatives: Dr. Harry Gold

Food and Nutrition as Related to the War: Dr. Charles Glen King

Obituary: Max Harrison Demorest: François E. Mathes. Recent Deaths

Scientific Events:
The Inter-American Institute of Agricultural Sciences; du Pont Fellowships in Chemistry; The Detroit Meeting of the American Chemical Society; The Torrey Botanical Club; Wartime Training in Scientific and Technological Fields

Scientific Notes and News

Discussion:

Special Correspondence:
Reorganization of Conservation Work in Maryland: Professor Julian D. Corrington

Scientific Books:
Photography: Dr. Henry C. Staehele. Drugs and Cell Catalysts: Dr. M. H. Severs

Special Articles:
The Lethal Effect of Triethylene Glycol Vapor on Air-Borne Bacteria and Influenza Virus: Dr. O. H. Robertson and Others. Preventing the Bacterial Oxidation of Rubber: Dr. Albert E. Dimond and Dr. James G. Horsfall

Scientific Apparatus and Laboratory Methods:
A Simple Method for Converting a Line-Record into a Shadowgram: Dr. Frederic A. Gibbs. A Method for the Study of Invertebrate Blood in Vitro: Dr. Emil Liebmann

Science News

SCIENCE: A Weekly Journal devoted to the Advancement of Science, edited by J. McKeen Cattell and published every Friday by THE SCIENCE PRESS

Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Annual Subscription, $6.00 Single Copies, 15 Cts.

SCIENCE is the official organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Information regarding membership in the Association may be secured from the office of the permanent secretary in the Smithsonian Institution Building, Washington, D.C.

DIGITALIS AND SOME OF ITS DERIVATIVES

By Dr. Harry Gold
DEPARTMENT OF PHARMACOLOGY, CORNELL UNIVERSITY MEDICAL COLLEGE

Ladies and Gentlemen: I wish first to acknowledge the honor conferred upon me by the New England Heart Association through the invitation to address you this evening. The opportunity to discuss the subject of digitalis in the city of Boston, steeped in the traditions of cardiovascular research and rich in eminent leadership in cardiological practice, is indeed a great privilege. I feel doubly honored to have this opportunity on the occasion arranged as a tribute to the memory of one of New England’s most distinguished physicians.

I have planned to present the results of experiments and to discuss briefly lines of evidence having to do with various phases of the nature of the action of digitalis and its glycosides. Some are based on experiments performed on animals, others directly on human subjects. The account is not intended to exhaust the subject. It represents for the most part explorations in this field carried out during the past few years by a group of collaborators in our laboratory and clinics.2

One of the popular formulations regarding the mechanism by which digitalis abolishes heart failure is based on the view that the essential action of digitalis is an action on the “tone” of the heart muscle. There is no general agreement as to the nature of the

2 From the Department of Pharmacology of Cornell University Medical College and the Cardiac Services of the Beth Israel Hospital and the Hospital for Joint Diseases in New York City. Chief collaborators: Drs. McKeen Cattell, Nathaniel T. Kwit, Janet Travell, Harold Otto, Milton Kramer, Theodore Fox and William Zahm.

1 Annual Jackson Lecture of the New England Heart Association, delivered at the Boston Medical Library, April 24, 1942.
Editor's Summary