which have been an important feature of the Fortnightly for some months past, approach a conclusion in an article on "Jews in Russia." Sir Frederick Pollock writes on John Milton; Miss M. Dewie contributes a readable paper entitled "In Ruthenia," dealing with a province of Poland that is almost unknown to the general tourist, but which possesses many points of interest; A. Eggmont Hake and O. E. Wessels discuss the American tariff war; there is a suggestive paper on "Reason and Religion." A. Symons Eccles criticises the results of the Tenth International Medical Congress; George Moore criticises the new pictures in the National Gallery; and George Saintsbury sketches the life and works of Anthony Hamilton.

"The story is a piquant, good-humored, entertaining narrative of a strange voyage. A reader, prettier book is seldom seen."—Literary World.

"This is a sprightly narrative of personal incidents. The book will be a pleasant reminder to many of rough experiences on a frontier which is rapidly receding."—Boston Transcript.

The picture of our disolute North-western territory twenty-five years ago, in contrast with its civilized aspect today, and the pleasant features of the writer's style, constitute the claims of his little book to present attention."—The Dial.
